

Fumigation On Border; Gas Is Very Powerful

One of the largest fumigation houses in the world may be built soon on the Arizona border, according to O. D. Deputy chief border inspector, federal horticultural board.

The proposed big fumigation house on the Arizona border would be located at Nogales, Mr. Deputy, who maintains headquarters at El Paso, Texas, and whose mission to this part of the southwest is in connection with a fumigation house being built at El Paso, said topographical conditions at Nogales were such that when the house is erected there it probably will be of a 10 car length, or about 500 feet long. There would be two units in the house, giving it a capacity of 50 cars. The El Paso fumigation house will have a capacity of 30 cars. The fumigation work is chiefly aimed to prevent entry of the pink boll worm, so disastrous to cotton, from Mexico into the United States. Incidentally, the fumigation process kills other insect pests which might find their way into this country along with shipments from Mexico. For instance, on which active war has been declared against the spread of bubonic plague.

Powerful Gas.
Hydrocyanic acid gas, the most poisonous known, more deadly, even, than that used on the battlefields of Europe, is employed in the fumigation process. It is retained for a period of one hour in an air tight compartment in which the car or other container is placed with its cargo to be fumigated.

The requirement for an air tight compartment makes it necessary that the fumigation house be large enough to hold one freight car or more. This arrangement is effected by building the house with sliding interior doors and folding doors at the ends. Thus the size may be reduced as necessary.

Mr. Deputy covers the entire border territory, his work having to do with quarantine and prohibitive measures in force against Mexico. Fumigation is emphasized as not to be confused in any case as an excuse for the entry of any commodity. It merely is an added precaution to correct possible errors of inspection.

The government does the fumigation work at actual cost where it erects and maintains houses for the purpose.

N. BARETT, despite the fact that he has a sense of humor, is usually dignified and as a rule does not get much "kidding." As president of the chamber of commerce, vice-president of the State National bank and owner of a few lumber yards, California ranches and things, he is in a position to demand and get respect. But a man at a local filling station did not know that. The other day Mr. Barett, who is not very tall, drove into a station to get his gas supply replenished. When his tank had been filled the man who filled it for him said: "Come back again, Shorty."

Reflections Of A Bachelor Girl

By HELEN ROWLAND.

HOME flattery, home comfort, and home cooking are "tokens" which will outlast all the baby ribbons in the trousseau.

There are many times when a woman would gladly drop her husband if she did not feel morally certain that some other woman would come right along and pick him up.

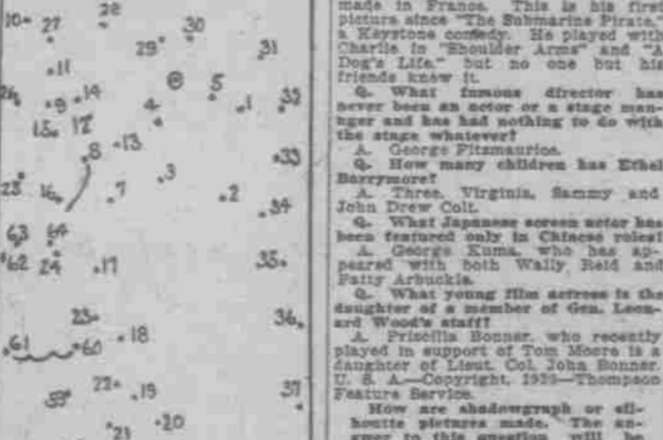

The price of a woman's love is usually in inverse ratio to its value; but most men raise it, as they would a motor car, according to the hard time they had getting it, and the sacrifices they have to make in order to keep it.

Alas, why is it that a man's idea of "rejuvenation" never consists in cultivating a lot of new aspirations and enthusiasms, but in reviving a lot of his old sins and follies?

Don't fancy your husband's love is dead because he insists on telling you highly colored "fairy tales" instead of the simple truth. No man would take all that trouble for a woman he didn't love.

It is awfully inconsiderate of a
